

Old House JOURNAL

AMERICAN HOUSES

100 Years of MODERN DESIGN

Fine Design

A Siding Apart

When it comes to wood siding, it isn't everyday you hear for the first time about a different material. As an alternative to the cedar and pine that have been ubiquitous in lumberyards for over a century, Highland Craftsmen, Inc. has decided to bring to the market a new species and product in the form of poplar bark siding. Inspired by building traditions of North Carolina's Appalachian Mountains and its once-plentiful chestnut trees, the all-natural material is made in 26" and 18" lengths and ideal for the rustic look in buildings ranging from lodges to Arts & Crafts houses. For more information on the siding, as well as other rustic home products, contact Highland Craftsman at www.highlandcraftsmen.com. Circle 7 on resource card.

PLUS

PRO TIPS on Hanging Doors

HOW TO COLOR EXTERIOR STUCCO

RESOURCES for Hard-to-Find Hardware

October 2005

A Restore Media Publication

$5.95US $6.95CAN

Display until November 7, 2005